continuing the same path of existence.

Looking to the route of conventional strategies and tactics of building a popular large scale movement with in the country doesn't seem a logical course. The climate doesn't exist for the cataclysmic result necessary to destabilize the present structure.

That will only happen once we begin making preparations for actions on two fronts simultaneously. The first is creating an atmosphere of strength and independence in our poorest communities. It has to be done with people who understand the necessity of both levels, Meaning... they'll have to know and be willing to accept the responsibilities and consequences of whatever level taken on. We have to have people organizing within the communities with the goal of turning the people away from the government, and more self reliance. It has to be understood that doing this in itself is a declaration of war.

The process will be slow because there are so many different areas to be addressed. On developing a strong above ground organization; The migration of our people into particular areas developing programs that serve the needs of the people living in the communities. Helping families; getting food, heat during the cold months, pressuring landlords to make repairs. Programs have to be created for all age groups which would focus on a new way of life. People have to be discouraged from falling into selfish individualism. Those who continue to perpetuate negativity, hostility, and irresponsible violence throughout the community have to be exposed and dealt with. Of course this will not be the responsibility of the above ground organization. The establishment of a small, secret well trained urban guerrilla army not attached to the above ground movement, but capable of maintaining good intelligence at all times.

A military wing is essential to any success. As long as we limit ourselves to just one particular phase of struggle, we'll remain as we are. Conditions are very ripe in this country for rebellion. However, its up to us to intensify the hostilities between the state and the civilian population. We live in a time where the most reactionary elements have a strong grip over the society. In that those controlling the majority of our resources have no thought of allowing us to threaten their position over us. In order for us to gain any relief... it has to become necessary for us to make them feel unsafe on a consistent level. What the people of this nation need are examples of what can be done by a small number of people. Momentum builds from examples. The mission is to kill any faith left in people already angry. To destroy the myth of invincibility in so much as their vulnerability. A complete dedication to sabotaging the entire structure and order.

"We will never know freedom, nor will we ever be safe until our enemies fear for their lives as we have."

Some Realities of Nation Building

The culture that exists in this society has brought about catastrophic social problems. When the correlation between the dynamics of this society; economy, social structure and racial composition are thought, spoken or written about, generally these are things the average "grass roots" person has become bored with. Not only because the majority of these encounters are a maze of shallowness and pro-government propaganda with fascist ideals cloaked in unrealistic faith, but also because even when the status quo is attacked by "progressive forces," the challenges are weak because too much emphasis is placed on appealing to the consciousness of the apathetic and elements of the society who's interests are separate. This is not to say that it's not absolutely essential to work as hard as possible to make people aware of rampant misinformation and diversions from real issues questions and solutions. No doubt we'll always be struggling to combat lies.

To this date, the struggle to engage the oppressor state hasn't yet been able to sustain itself from the numerous past heavy blows dealt by government forces, and gain the momentum necessary to wage real war on all levels. In the sphere of this country, there are nations within the nation. Separate class and race interest make it virtually impossible at this time to reach out to more than one level of society at once. Even though dissatisfaction is on a high level throughout many levels of society, no cohesion exists at this point.

Contrary to what has historically been consistent with the formula of revolutionary movements. That is, the struggle being led by the middle-class, which was conventionally the more stable class. This will not likely be the case here in Amerikkka. Though not yet disciplined, the only militant classes here in Amerikkka are the lower working class and unemployed. In short terms these are the only threats to the power structure... especially the non-white under class peoples. Which has been made more apparent in the last thirty years, and where repression is the order. The focus on the state has been an emphasis on "security." A terminology in accord with many code words that are used to create and maintain the atmosphere of mistrust and paranoia. We know the government can't survive without social division. And when we try to organize against laws that are oppressive, usury and state violence against us, we are attacked on every level. Particularly the pro-government media. Through them, images are created and overt implications are made to suggest that anything not in line with pro-western culture "democracy" are not positive or in their way of thinking legitimate ways of life.

When faced with an enemy of this kind, it becomes clear that we have to go beyond conventional ways of thinking. For a long time most of us have been satisfied with accepting the roles of peaceful resistance. Not meant as a criticism in that all levels of resistance are a necessary part of the whole. Even so... past and present events, within these boarders... as well as international lessons of war. The main lesson to be learned is that conflict in the realm of the struggle for power, or a struggle against a powerful enemy must always reach the point of bloodshed. Negotiation is an impossibility with forces that are secure in their own strength.

Therefore, with these things being as they are, it means that those of us who are serious about waging real war against oppression, the time has come to cross the line and make preparations for combat roles. Not only is a war to be waged against the forces of the government and its cohorts. Even so, we can't deny dealing with the negative forces among us. As a result of a multitude of systematic, economic and social, anti-social problems. The dense urban populations, that are made up mainly of the most desperate and despaired people, mostly African and other non-whites. This is the factor of race colonization and class control combined.

The focus of the government on all levels (local, state and federal), is a long history of an on going offensive against us.

(1.) The forced dependency on people who are greedy and hostile to our existence.

(2.) A structure which leaves us powerless.

(3.) Under constant threat from paramilitary mercenary forces (police agencies).

(4.) A criminal justice system that is racist.

Set in place against the mass of poor people. A weapon of genocide and repression. A structure developed to suppress potential rebellion. A tool of convenience that corresponds with the conditions of anti-social behavior created from how the society is organized. In effect... the design to breed a mentality of self-destructiveness. So now we have a situation of people against themselves and depending on an enemy to intervene and resolve problems that were for the most part were brought about by their control over them. It's foolish to think of
